

Method and Apparatus For Making Sushi Rolls

Abstract

The present invention and method relates to an apparatus for forming and separating rolled sushi dishes. The device comprises a non-stick, flexible mat with slots to facilitate the cutting of the rolled food product. The slots are positioned perpendicular to the axis of flexibility of the mat so that the formed food product may be cut into cylindrical portions.